2. Below is a paragraph written by Rabbi Jonathan Sacks.

"So long as every crisis was dealt with by Moses and miracles, the Israelites remained in a state of dependency. Their default response was complaint. For them to grow to adulthood and responsibility, there had to be a transition from passive recipients of God's blessings to active creators. The people had to become God's "partners in the work of creation."<sup>2</sup> That, I believe, is what the sages meant when they said, "Call them not 'your children' but 'your builders.'"<sup>3</sup> People have to become builders if they are to grow from childhood to adulthood."
